Preface

After spending many rewarding hours of research at the Arkansas History Commission in Little Rock, I learned to appreciate the sources which were available to me. Many of these sources were the result of individual efforts to provide the public with information.

One research project prompted me to find out the burial site of a Union soldier who was killed during the Battle of Second Bull Run, Stephen A. Vesper. He was not listed on any 1867 Roll of Honor which was published by the United States Government. Phone calls to various Virginia National Cemeteries did not result in information on his site of burial. I did, however, find out that each national cemetery operated independently of each other even when located in the same state.

I was aware that Stephen A. Vesper had a brother, Cyrus Vesper, who was killed at the Battle of Prairie Grove in Arkansas. Cyrus Vesper was listed in the Honor Roll as being buried in Fayetteville, Arkansas. I located his grave in the Fayetteville National Cemetery. Much to my amazement on the same row etched on a tombstone was S.A. Vesper.

Through research I was able to find out that a part of the of the remaining Vesper family had migrated from Wisconsin to Arkansas after the Civil War. Therefore, I concluded that the family had Stephen's remains brought to Arkansas and placed near his brother, Cyrus. I speculate that his body was removed before he was recorded in the Roll of Honor in Virginia and arrived after the completion of the Roll of Honor list in Fayetteville. Unfortunately no date was given for the placement of S.A. Vesper in the Fayetteville National Cemetery.

Because of the difficulties I experienced, I decided to record information on the Civil War soldiers buried in the National Cemetery in Little Rock and eventually to include the two remaining National Cemeteries in Arkansas.

When recording information on Civil War soldiers buried in the Arkansas National Cemeteries, I utilized information on computer printouts supplied by the director's offices, the Honor Roll of 1867-1868 and the tombstones. This index may include names of individuals who may not have been Civil War veterans. These names were included because the information was not always clear and I would rather include a soldier who was not a Civil War veteran than to exclude one who was.

I spent more time recording tombstone information in the National Cemetery in Little Rock because it was the biggest of the three. I was out there on the grounds every opportunity that time and weather would allow. I became a familiar figure with the crew that maintained the grounds. And at times, I was asked by visitors for assistance or some would just ask what I was doing.

My visits there were routine in nature. I would park my vehicle in the general area of where was to record tombstone inscriptions. My sister-in-law would place a tape recorder nearby to see if we could pick up any "messages". I would take my new micro-recorder with me to record the inscriptions. When finished for the day, I would return and transcribe the audio information. My sister-in-law would listen to her tape. We followed this procedure on each visit.

On the last day of my work, I was to complete section 6 in the Little Rock National Cemetery. It would not be necessary for me to return; my project would be complete. As usual a tape recorder was turned on and placed on a tombstone near where I was to work and I proceeded with my micro-recorder to Section 6. When I completed my work, I returned to pick up the other tape recorder and drove home. Later in the day, I turned on my recorder to transcribe my taped information on to paper. Part of the way through the tape I heard a very strange sound on the tape. The sound was occurring in the background of my voice. It seemed to start at a very slow speed then gather momentum. The noise seemed to be a confusion of voices at slow speed. It was like nothing I had ever heard. The sounds only lasted a matter of seconds. Then it was gone. I never heard these sounds when I was out there that day or any other time. The recording was normal in every respect. My voice was normal on the tape. The recorder was new. The batteries were charged and the tape had never been used. I thought that if my tape recorder picked up these sounds then perhaps the other tape recorder near by also picked up these same sounds. It did not. To me this was an unusual experience. The volume of the sounds interspersed with my voice were at a sound level which I should have heard right at the time that it was recorded.

My work at the other two cemeteries were routine. No strange sounds were recorded. Fayetteville and Ft. Smith only required one visit each. Perhaps I was not there long enough to merit such encounters at these two locations.

This index has merit. In all of my access time to documents kept by the United States Government this source is more accurate and complete than anything the United States Government can provide on Civil War soldiers buried in Arkansas National Cemeteries.

Brief Histories of Arkansas' National Cemeteries

Ft. Smith National Cemetery

According to the records of the United States Government, this cemetery, near the Arkansas River, was situated on a government reservation. The cemetery was established in 1832 and at that time it was about one-quarter of a mile from Ft. Smith in what was then Crawford County.

During the American Civil War, few burials occurred here. However, in the spring of 1866 approximately 100 bodies were removed from burial sites in Van Buren, Arkansas and from various camps within the area of the fort. These were reinterred within the boundaries of this cemetery.

Originally the cemetery was on about five and a half acres of land and the grounds were arranged in sections intersected by walkways and avenues. A white-washed picket fence surrounded the burial site. This simple structure, by 1867, surrounded and embraced the remains of over 1,579 soldiers.

Today, a stonewall topped by iron pickets outline the boundaries of this national cemetery. The grounds are manicured with assorted shrubs, flowers and trees. The cemetery is now surrounded by the city of Ft. Smith.

By 1866 the United States Government had purchased from the city of Little Rock a little over nine acres of land in the city cemetery. The purchase was made for the purpose of burying Union soldiers. This area was originally located about one-half mile southeast of Little Rock and had been used as a camp by Union soldiers.

By 1868 the military plot was designated a national cemetery for deceased Union soldiers who had been buried throughout the state of Arkansas. Therefore in 1868, United States soldiers were gathered from Dardanelle, Lewisburg, Jenkins Ferry, Princeton, Marks Mill, Pine Bluff and DeValls Bluff and were reinterred in the national cemetery.

In 1884, a Confederate Cemetery was established adjoining the national cemetery. The remains of 640 Confederates were removed from Mt. Holly Cemetery in Little Rock to be reburied in the new cemetery. This move was sponsored by the Daughters of the Confederacy. In 1913 a deed from the City of Little Rock transferred the Confederate Cemetery to the United States Department of War. The deed contained a restriction that none but Confederate veterans were to be interred within the deeded land. This exclusive restriction, however, was removed by an Act of Congress in 1938 and the Confederate Cemetery became the Confederate Section in the Little Rock National Cemetery. That opened the original Confederate Cemetery to the interments of all those eligible.

A few Confederates are buried outside the Confederate Section. This allows for the elimination of the last traces of distinction to be made between the honored dead of both sides of the American Civil War.

Fayetteville National Cemetery

Nestled among the Boston Mountains of Northwest Arkansas is Fayetteville National Cemetery. In 1867 the United States Government acquired title to six acres of land from David Walker, lawyer and judge, and Stephen Stone, a merchant. By 1869 the cemetery was under the control of Old Fort Gibson, Indian Territory.(Cherokee Nation).

In all probability this land was selected because of earlier burials of Union soldiers who had died in Fayetteville and were already buried on the property owned by Stephen K. Stone. He probably had given permission to bury Union soldiers on his land in 1862. Records show Fayetteville was the original burial site for over 100 Union soldiers. Soldiers killed in the battles of Pea Ridge and Prairie Grove were buried on the battlefield and were not removed until some years later.

The remains of soldiers were removed from various localities in the areas of Fayetteville, Bentonville, Leetown, Sugar Creek Valley, Keitsville, Prairie Grove, and Elkhorn Tavern. A few bodies were retrieved from Barry and Newton Counties in Missouri and the Indian Territory.

Local legend promotes that the hill on which the cemetery is located was once the site of leg executions. One execution, said to have taken place, was that of a father, mother and son who were found guilty in 1845 for the murder of Jonathan Selby.

In the spring of 1867 work was started to construct the national cemetery. The work was completed by autumn of the same year. The original design for the square, six-acre lot was a circle or wheel within the square lot and a six-pointed star within the circle. A flagpole was to be placed in the center of the star. This plan would have provided for 1,700 graves.

However, this plan had to be modified because of the need for more burial space, the original plan was modified by making the points of the stars into rectangles and widening the surrounding circle. Also no distinction in placement within the cemetery was made between officers and enlisted veterans.

With the passage of time, the physical surroundings of the cemetery have changed. The Fayetteville National Cemetery, however, has managed to maintain a picturesque resting place for the honored dead.

Sources

The three principle sources used for the names of the soldiers were:

the National Cemetery records in the form of a computer printout, the 1867 Roll of Honor (see citation below), and the information engraved on the monuments themselves.

Some soldiers were not found in all three sources. Many soldiers listed on the 1867 Roll of Honor were not found on the grounds of the cemeteries; nor were they listed in the National Cemetery records, but they have been included in this volume. Some bodies were apparently removed by family and friends in the years following their original interments. Records of those removals do not seem to exist.

There are many graves marked with monuments engraved with the word "Unknown," particularly in the Little Rock National Cemetery. Several explanations can be given for this situation. Originally, markers were wooden headboards. When these were to be replaced with marble markers, many were beyond deciphering and became "unknowns." Some of the deceased soldiers had originally been buried elsewhere and later transported to be reinterred in the National Cemetery. This procedure may have created more "unknowns." Previous cemetery officials may have discarded old records and replaced them with newer forms which did not always require the same or as much information as the original form. If the original burial records had not been eliminated or altered, the number of "unknown" markers would be fewer in number. Some "unknowns" were the result of deceased soldiers who had no identification on their persons.

All three National Cemeteries in Arkansas are divided into sections which are numbered. The maps of the cemeteries show this information. Sources for the section numbers listed with the entries in this book are the grave markers, cemetery records, and 1867 Roll of Honor. Some of the section numbers have been changed since the 1867 Roll of Honor was published. The 1867 section numbers were used with the names of the 1867 Roll of Honor dead which do not appear on current national cemetery lists and are not found to have a marked grave site. They are included in the index because the original record shows they were buried there in 1867.

Grave numbers were taken from the current national cemetery records and the 1867 Roll of Honor. Grave numbers have changed with the passage of time, and differences have been noted in the records.

Death dates were taken from the grave markers and the 1867 Roll of Honor which was compiled by the U.S. government and lists the earliest interments. All the Roll of Honor dead were recorded in this volume even though they did not appear in other sources.

For Confederate States of America soldiers, the abbreviation "CSA" has been noted in the record.

Arkansas' Damned Yankees and Index to Arkansas Confederate Soldiers, both compiled by Desmond Walls Allen, provided additional information on the Arkansas soldiers. Arkansas Damned Yankees and the three volume Index to Arkansas Confederate Soldiers are available from the publisher of this volume, Arkansas Research, PO Box 303, Conway, AR 72033. In addition, an index to pensions granted by the State of Arkansas to former Confederate soldiers residing in Arkansas from all states is available from Arkansas Research as Index to Arkansas Confederate Pension Applications. Union pensions were based on regiment rather than residence, and Arkansas Union Soldiers Pension Application Index lists the soldiers who served in Arkansas units who applied for pensions. Researchers interested in Union soldiers from other states should consult National Archives records for service and pension records.

Researchers are reminded that many variations in spelling were used. In this volume, the spelling of the entry was the one thought to be correct. Examples: Stephens/Steavens/Steven Sweet/Sweat, Sykes/Sikes.

Errors exist in this volume, though hopefully, they are few in number. Some names are missing or incorrectly spelled. Every effort was made for accuracy. Information was recorded directly from the grave markers and this helped cut down on the number of mistakes. There are a few typographical errors in the 1867 Roll of Honor, and in some cases, these have been perpetuated in this index. No index is perfect, but the correlation of the sources used in the compilation of this index makes it a very useful reference work.

About the Author

Rena Knight is the consummate historian. Her extraordinary gift of teaching links memories that bind today with yesterday and, indeed, weaves golden threads into the tapestry of our nation. To listen to Rena Knight is to see a wedge of wild geese in the sky and to hear the cry of heron, to follow trails that lead into distant hills, to experience the blood and tears of Valley Forge, to march with the soldiers at Bunker Hill, and to travel to the battle fronts and suffer the dark fears of the Civil War.

Born in Little Rock, Rena received her early education in the North Little Rock Public Schools and returned after receiving her degree to teach in those same schools for 29 years. Although excited by history in all its ramifications, Rena has a particular passion for the Civil War. Accompanied by her husband Al, who shares her interests, Rena spends weekends and summers visiting battle sites throughout Tennessee, Mississippi, Missouri, and Georgia researching and excavating elusive fragments of historical significance and any "lingering gesture of the past." Her extraordinary collection of Civil War memorabilia has been the result of many hours spent "puttering around" in antique stores all over the South.

In addition to chairing the History Department of North Little Rock High School, Rena has found the time to publish articles in the North South Trader's Civil War, to complete an index of Civil War soldiers buried in the three National Cemeteries in Arkansas, and to prepare for publication a book based on over fifty letters written by Stephen A. Vesper of the 6th Wisconsin Regiment. Rena is an active member of the Arkansas Council of Social Studies, National Education Association, Arkansas Education Association, North Little Rock Teacher's Association, and the National Historical Society.

The testament of hundreds of students gives credence to the fact that Rena Knight's career has been one of exploring, celebrating, and elevating life. To know Rena is to understand that her thoughts breathe and live and have their being in history.
